2 I'm having gallbladder surgery on January 5th, so I will be ready at home on the 6th. I also have much chronic back pain from a thoracic hernia and have a hard time making it through my job as is. My area of expertise though is stuff involving the mind. I'm an INFJ male and have a psychologist like personality. It does good with my patients at my nursing job, and so I'll contribute what I can.

Reality doesn't happen to you. It responds to you. You create your own path, but you will reap the fruit you sow one way or another. Whether it's doing what's right or cowardice when those who can't defend themselves needed you. You craft your own reality.

4 ctrl + f'd for "rape" and no results

▼ Lemme just say that those of us alive and gone that have known the feel of having to live under a government with self-reinforcing patterns of systematic sexual rape know that murder or national or international election fraud (a form of vicarious or virtual / mass media rape) is nothing (but sadistic pleasure) to the non-existing consciences of sociopaths like Jeffery Epstein or Harvey Weinstein or João Teixeira de Faria and so many more.

1 Why is this stickied? Really? Why does irrelevant shit like this keep getting stickied?! The ONLY things that should be stickied (for now) is major news and event organizations. We need to organize (not just talk about organizing) and shit like this detracts from that. Also, this shit is just preaching to the choir. This isn't fun and games anymore.

7 Even as soldiers prepared for horrors such as D-Day and the Battle of the Bulge, their leaders realized that morale was as important as knowing your weapon system. Yes, there are always a few who w at home and shave a second off their field strip-and-assemble times, but most of the crew went out on the and prepare in our own way. This is what gives the resulting army resilience and resourcefulness.

I have young kids, and this is the exact reason why we don't lie to them about Santa Claus. I feel like there is some subtle damage done to young minds when they discover they've been lied to by their parents, the people they should most trust. I don't get why you would want them to have a "redpill" moment at like 6 years old.

Agreed. I'm glad my parents told me the truth from the beginning.

I remember as a child suspecting Santa might not be real, then eventually as I got older I realized the truth.

I asked my mom why they lied to me about Santa Clause and she said she didn't lie, that Santa lives in all our hearts... I knew it was BS but didn't say anything about it.

Years later I was at my grandparents house and said to my parents and grandparents that I didn't think it was right to lie about Santa Clause and my grandma was just saying it would take away all the fun of Christmas. I said it's still be fun getting presents on Christmas whether a kid knew it was from their parents or thought it was from Santa, that the truth wouldn't diminish the fun. She just kept insisting though.

Any time I brought it up, I never felt like anybody was really listening to me about it, they all just wanted to make excuses or defend it and it never seemed like they could comprehend my perspective on it, like my perspective was just wrong or something.

I think the santa claus lie ultimately hurts christianity as well. Makes it easier for people to become atheist.

Very interesting. I was raised religious, to the point that my parents thought Christmas and Easter were too pagan, so we never celebrated them. But now that I have kids, I want them to experience the traditions that I missed out on.

But yeah, the thought of gaslighting a 4 year old because it's funny or something is kind of demented when you stop and think about it.

I came to that conclusion as well. If I ever have kids, I may buy them Christmas presents, but they will know who those presents came from and they will know exactly what we are celebrating on the birth of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. ✓

9 ▼ It's funny, because right before this I literally watched a leftist using this flawed logic, on reddit. I also called them out for doing so, as expected I got down voted to hell there and it's only been 10 minutes. Lefties don't like the truth.

12 ▼ This is a perfect analogy to what we're now regularly seeing over and over again from the Leftist media, because Santa is a not only a hoax, but a hoax perpetrated through monolithic gaslighting by people who know full well it's a hoax and get perverse pleasure through lying about it.

Oh, sht, I just managed to convince myself to hate Santa in the short time it took to write that.

Now 30 years later I've learned that both Santa Claus and elections are hoaxes.

6 I still don't get how so many Christians continue to push a lie like Santa Clause. Like have you ever talked to an Atheist before? 99% of them from Dawkins to Hitchens to the local idiot kid from your own town. Each one seems so lost and lonely and compares the creator with all the childhood made up entities.

" You really believe in God ? So you also believe in Santa Clause and the tooth fairy huh?".

That quote I hear from every Athiest.

Their faith was tainted and ruined when they found out the fat man was not real and they realized their parents were full of shit. Christians need to stop. And for me and my house my kids will never believe a lie.
